The main title of this dramatic play, "...His Truth is Marching On..." was derived from Julia Ward Howe's stirring, "Battle Hymn of the Republic." Howe penned the inspirational lyrics to this song after attending a U.S. Army troop review, where she heard a contingent of Union troops singing "John Brown's Body." Although irreverent, the original words to the song underscored fiery abolitionist John Brown's successful exploitation of the means to reinvent himself as a "martyr of liberty," in the wake of his arrest, trial, conviction and execution, for attempting to lead a slave revolt at Harper's Ferry, VA., on October 16, 1859. The issue of abolishing slavery, as thrust into the national consciousness by John Brown's militant actions at Harper's Ferry, haunted Abraham Lincoln throughout his nomination, election and term as the nation's chief executive. Brown's "truth" was that violence was justified to bring about social change. Lincoln abhorred violence, believing that reason and the rule of law were the only means of sustaining lasting reform of the social order. The audience is left to ponder, whose "truth" does it subscribe to?
