Rayven's Redemption (Volume 1) A T King

The night descends on the city as the streetlights buzz with excitement while electricity flows through them. One by one, they flicker on and burn a dull orange color while they warm up. Every evening it is the same old song and dance from the city lights. The second the sun dips below the smallest building in town, they flicker signaling the beginning of the shift for all the night owls. At this very moment, the factory workers have punched out and are driving home to enjoy dinner with their families. Bakeries, barber shops, and many various locally owned shops are closing their doors while the few clubs in town are getting ready to welcome the few early partiers who begin to trickle through their doors. Even though it is a pretty big city, it has its small city charm throughout. The police patrol the streets like clockwork. They are so predictable that one can set their watch by them. As always, the paramedics are sitting on the back of their ambulances outside the hospital while they await a call for assistance. Most nights, they will spend the first half of their shift just sitting around talking and laughing before they get a call. For the most part, nothing ever happens. The only real menace to their quiet way of life is the occasional graffiti by the teens who are too old for the afterschool program at the boys and girls club, but too young to be permitted into any of the clubs. Even with its peaceful glamor, the city is about to cry out in pain and agony, as one of its citizens is about to go through a major change that no one will see coming.
