In the South, artificial hair is king, and chicks pay top dollar for the best there is.

For a poor white girl in a drug ridden home, Megan sees it as her chance to finally escape.

Nicki, her friend and partner in crime, sees it as a way to her brother alive, a young black youth who lies in a coma that she prays one day will open his eyes.

But the hair they sell doesn't come their scalp, nor is it something they bought in supply. They've picked up the hustle of robbing rich men then passing off all of the goods as their own.

But when the two roll up on the wrong somebody, who takes their deed a little too personal, it soon sets off a chain of events that just might cost both girls their lives.
