Sample passage:

Determined to give the enemy a great vantage in return for the pecuniary indemnity that he required of them, this unhappy man [Arnold] stooped low enough to ask for, and obtain from Washington, the command of West Point. Andre, who had for months written him letters in a disguised hand under the name of John Anderson, finally met him, one night, at the foot of a mountain about six miles below Stony Point, called the Long Clove. Arnold, with infinite cunning, had devised this meeting, and had tempted the adventurous spirit of Andre, who left a British man-of-war called the “Vulture” in order to hold converse with his fellow-conspirator.
